

Monday, 09 March 2009

Website development by WhichDoor

In the 8 years we've been in business we have always designed our own website using FrontPage and – frankly – that's exactly what it looked like: perfectly functional but a bit amateur-looking. Recently we had a graphical makeover, got a new logo and agreed new images and colours. However, the quotes we'd been given for a new website to match meant that we would have to schedule that for further down the line. We were disappointed that we were going to look much better on paper than online.

Then we met Darren! Whichdoor took our existing content, images and colours and came up overnight with suggestions for an improved layout and page design. We were staggered at the speed and amazed at how much more professional the new website looked. We went through a process of review and correction which took a couple of cycles before both parties were happy. Nothing was too much trouble and the whole process from first design to uploading the files to our site took under four weeks.

We could hardly believe it that the total price was less than £500 – about a quarter of the lowest prices we'd been quoted elsewhere. What's more, the whole process was completely hassle-free and customer-focussed. We've already recommended Whichdoor to other businesses we deal with.